

Mis en ligne par Arrête Ton Char !, le 13 novembre 2015 (dernière m.a.j. : 28 février 2018)

Archaeologists have possibly found a part of the ancient Mycenaean Kingdom's throne, according to a report by "Real news."

The article notes that this part of the throne, which is estimated to have been built around the 13th century B.C., was found a few meters away from the Mycenaean Acropolis and weighs around 50 kilos.

The discovery was made by Dickinson State University Associate Professor of Archaeology and President of the Mycenaean Institute, Christofilis Maggidis as well as members of his team.

While the throne was discover...

Lire l'article d'Anastassios Adamopoulos sur greekreporter.com